CAMED Wound Support consists of a proprietary blend of various organic acids combined with ascorbic acid (vitamin C), riboflavin (vitamin B2) and niacinamide (vitamin B3). Although pharmacokinetic studies on CAMED Wound Support as a multiple substance formulation have not been conducted, the active ingredients act locally at the site of application and systemic absorption in significant quantities is not expected.

Pharmacodynamic properties:

The mechanism of action of CAMED Wound Support is twofold. CAMED Wound Support firstly has a bactericidal & fungicidal effect, and secondly supports wound healing by providing important vitamins locally at the site of application.

The proprietary blend of various organic acids acts upon the cellular membrane of fungi and bacteria, altering its permeability and the normal functioning of its associated enzymatic pool causing a final cellular membrane rupture. It interacts exclusively with the cellular membrane and not with the DNA which prevents resistance generation and mutation of the microorganisms.

The beneficial effects of ascorbic acid, riboflavin and niacinamide on skin health and wound healing are well-known. Riboflavin and ascorbic acid are potent antioxidants which contributes to the protection of cells from oxidative stress. Both these vitamins are also involved in tissue formation. Ascorbic acid contributes to normal collagen formation which supports healthy skin. Ascorbic acid also supports the wound healing process. Niacinamide contributes to the maintenance of healthy skin.
